The recent introduction of weather and traffic on XMRadio enables me to get current information when I am in my car, without changing from one form of medium to the other, a distracting activity while driving. Since this is a subscription service, it seems to me that this added service is appropriate to what I have been enjoying for two years.

The recent segment on CBS Sunday Morning about satellite radio noted the "objection" of NAB to this innovation. While the objection is understandable, it hardly seems that the subscribers to satellite radio endanger the integrity of those who belong to the NAB.

I hope that the FCC will note the concern, and then determine that the NAB's demonstration of political power has marginal merit, in the light of the First Amendment.
